Atos Worldline, CASSIS International in NFC-based m-payment service deal

Thursday 10 February 2011 | 02:53 PM CET

Global electronic payment services developer Atos Worldline has entered a partnership with mobile trusted service manager (TSM) company CASSIS International.

Under the terms of the deal, both parties are expected to offer NFC-enabled mobile payment services, thus targeting the needs of several services providers, including banks, public transport operators, telecoms operators and distributors. The partnership aims to enable these services providers to deploy several contactless applications, such as payments, transport season tickets, loyalty cards and authentication.

As a result, CASSIS International is expected to provide its TSM service and NFC technology for the deployment and management of the lifecycle of applications integrated into mobile phones on all types of elements, including SIMcards, SD cards and onboard OS.

Atos Worldline provides electronic payment services for financial markets as well as eServices for customers, citizens, and communities (eCS). CASSIS International activates in the industry of technology and trusted services for mobile payments, mobile commerce and near field communication (NFC). The company is globally certified by Visa and MasterCard.

Both companies are expected to exhibit their services at the Mobile World Congress event in Barcelona, Spain.

In a recent development, Dutch financial services company ABN AMRO has inked a five-year agreement with Atos Worldline, for the supply and management of a platform to support transactions via the iDEAL electronic payment standard.
